From the Editor's desk

Dear Friends and Colleagues,

"From research to health care: Your pharmacist is at your service" is the theme of this year's World Pharmacists Day. In the developed world, pharmacists play an important role in the health care sector. Pharmacists were involved in new drug discovery. Their role in rational drug usage, patient counselling, monitoring of adverse drug reactions, pharmacoconomics and formulation development is well documented and recognised world-wide.

Back home, sadly, the pharmacist continues to be a "compounder" – the one who sells the medicine at the medical stores. The reason for this rather sorry state of affairs is not very far to seek. Historically, in India, the pharmacy graduates were absorbed by the drug manufacturing sector and their role in patient health care was minimal. Over the years, the results of intense research by the pharmacists though helped in addressing many health issues, they continued to remain in the background.

In the recent years, Pharmacy Council of India introduced Pharm.D. course with the intension of bringing the profession of pharmacy closer to the patient care. If the idea has to reach its logical conclusion, the pharma graduates must acquire the required skill and knowledge. The institutions have a huge responsibility of preparing the graduates to face the challenges which can be met only with a very high degree of professional competency.

Pharmacists also should reach out to the community. It is an established fact that giving health care services and counselling at the community level substantially brings down the cost of health care by reducing hospitalisation, management of disease and prevention of recurrence.

It takes a long time and unrelenting work to usher a new era. May be in a decade we will be able to see the pharmacist playing more significant role in research and health care. Dear Pharmacists, let us resolve to acquire high degree of professional competence and knowledge so that we will get our right place in the health care.
